VOL. LXI. No. 48. REDWOOD CITY, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1922. ESTABLISHED 1859

MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION WILL BEGIN EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT

Every Store in the City to be Asked to Discontinue Keeping Open in the Evenings

A meeting of the Redwood City Merchants' Association was held in the chamber of commerce rooms on Tuesday evening with President Knox in the chair.

After considerable discussion it was unanimously carried that the following holidays be rigidly observed by the Redwood City merchants: Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's. All members of the association agreed to close all day on the days mentioned.

The very important subject of early closing was then brought up and it was the consensus of opinion that efforts be made to have all merchants agree to close their places of business at 6 p. m. daily excepting Sunday, all day. It was pointed out by various speakers that progressive cities all over the United States were recognizing the fact that such closing not only benefited employes but was a distinct benefit to the employer:. The volume of trade was not affected in the slightest degree. The saving in light and heat bills, to say nothing of the better morale and health of all concerned made the early closing argument unanswerable. M. E. Ryan, R. H. K. Smith, secretary-manager of the chamber of commerce, and others, pointed out that the matter was simply one of getting the support of the public. No doubts were expressed that purchasers would be glad to do their shopping earlier if it was shown to them that employees were benefited in health with consequential better service. The matter will be brought up at the next meeting of the association for unanimous endorsement of all merchants. Redwood City will certainly keep step with the large, progressive cities instead of retrograding. Should one or two merchants try to evade the issue after early closing goes into effect, there is no doubt but that public opinion will make them see the error of their ways by non-patronage and such methods of expressing disapproval of backward and inhumane business sense.

The Merchants' Association meets at the chamber of commerce the second and fourth Wednesdays in each month and promises to revolutionize business methods in Redwood City by co-operation and mutual consultations on all matters of commercial progressiveness.

MANSFIELD GIVES CORDIAL WELCOME TO FIVE POINTS BOOTLEGGERS

They Respond Cheerfully With Contributions of $200 Each to Redwood City's Treasury

The Redwood City police department, under the direction of Chief of Police Collins, made a raid on the bootleggers Tuesday night and arrested the proprietors of the Fly Trap Inn at Five Points, Starti's grocery and the Europa Hotel. The men appeared before Recorder Albert Mansfield on Thursday afternoon and each entered a plea of guilty and paid a fine of $200 each imposed by the judge. This makes a total of $1,200 paid into the city treasury by the bootleggers within the past month. If this keeps up the burden of taxation will become much lighter on the people.

TALK TO MARYLANDERS MADE BY SENATOR SHORTRIDGE

At the Lincoln memorial dinner held under the auspices of the Republican state central committee at Hagerstown, Md., February 13, Senator S. M. Shortridge was the orator of the evening. The Morning Herald of that city speaks in glowing terms of the senator's address. It says:

"Senator Shortridge, the orator, opened his address by saying that he was glad to be in the Gibraltar of Republicanism in a Republican state. In language couched in beautiful and touching words Senator Shortridge traced the life of Lincoln from his birth in a humble home, obscure, poverty stricken, to that tragic night in Washington when he fell a victim to an assassin's bullet. He told of the obstacles and difficulties that beset him in his path and said that it was a pleasure to stand beneath the party flag Lincoln lifted and carried to victory. Some of Lincoln's characteristics, his humaneness, his simplicity, his fidelity and his devotion to God and country were dwelt upon by the speaker. Senator Shortridge spoke of the great legacy left by Lincoln, of which we are the beneficiaries. The legacy is in our hands to perpetuate. Unless we are decadent, unless we are ungrateful and unless we are unworthy descendants we will resolve that this nation shall live and that the government of the people, for the people and by the people shall not perish.

"Our government is the best form of government ever set up upon this earth, the speaker continued, being molded and fashioned symmetrically by our forefathers. It is a government of strength and a guarantee of liberty. Those who come to our shores with bomb to burst, or torch to fire should be kicked out, Senator Shortridge said, and the words were greeted with applause. Millions from the nations of Europe are here to live under the flag of liberty. The speaker here referred to the carrying of civilization from the east to the west, setting up a land for people of our type and standard and not to be overrun by oriental immigration. Just as I would close the gates of the Atlantic to those who would come in to destroy, said Senator Shortridge, so would I close the Pacific to orientals, aliens, who can not and will not become Americans.

"Senator Shortridge called upon the people in the name of Lincoln to remember that we have duties to perform and to stand up for their country and their flag. The United States has nothing to be ashamed of, standing always for national righteousness and international justice.

"At this point the speaker took occasion to rap the man from Ohio who aspired to become president, saying that some great men had come from Ohio and some small ones had stayed at home. He then went to the defense of the national administration, pointing out the accomplishments and the condition of the country when the Republicans were returned to power in 1920. In our foreign policy, he said, we should always bear in mind that nations exist. The problems of today rae great, Senator Shortridge said, but they will be solved. The eight years of the Democratic reign of terror, wild and reckless extravagance, almost criminal administration and ocean voyages brought us nigh onto the rocks. Then in November, 1920, the American people, sick with disgust, rendered a verdict. Senator Shortridge said he hoped to see an entire Republican crew aboard the American ship of state."

BRITTON TO LECTURE AT PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

The January issue of the Pacific Service Magazine published by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company has the following article about J. A. Britton, a resident of Redwood City and father-in-law of Walter Kellogg, manager of the local branch of the company:

John A. Britton, our first vice president and general manager, has been selected by Princeton University to deliver a lecture at the university on April 4 on the subject of "Pacific Coast Public Utility Development."

Mr. Britton enjoys the distinction of being singled out from the men of our western land to take part in a series of lectures provided for by the Cyrus Fogg Brackett foundation and will make the trip to Princeton especially for that purpose.

The lecture will deal largely with the engineering features of electric power generation, both steam and hydraulic, and will describe the leading characteristcis of the high tension systems in California. Combined with engineering details will be the romantic story of the development of hydro-electric power plants in California through the agency of the old time reservoirs and ditches that were used in hydraulic mining during pioneer days. Mr. Britton proposes, under the broad subject of public utility development, to discuss the generation and distribution of gas.

John P. Weller, manager of the local branch of the Bank of Italy, is confined to his home with a slight attack of "flu."

CLEARING THE AIR

Members of the city board of trustees and stockholders in the Redwood City Water Company were to a certain extent disturbed by the editorial discussing the purchasing proposal that will go to the voters very soon. The city dads have been investigating things for some time. It is known that the rate paid to the water company is not compensatory. An increase to an amount equal to that paid in San Mateo and other neighboring towns would mean that Redwood City would have to conduct its distribution work at a loss and discontinue all extensions. So the only way out appeared to buy the company pumping plant. Several valuations have been made of the property, all of them in excess of $30,000. The company, responding to a request from the city trustees, made an offer to sell for $30,000. The stockholders have drawn no dividends for the past few years and would prefer to have their money invested otherwise. So they made the proffer. The bond issue proposed will cover quite a bit of ground, as all served from the company wells will be included. That will make the burden of paying off the bonds a very equitable proposition and not a burdensome one. Operating costs and costs of extensions can be met from service charges, thus enabling the city to keep the service up to its present excellent standard with probably no increase in rates.

There's the situation as the trustees view it after thorough investigation as to what is best for the city.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Reorganization of the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce was well under way today following the arrival yesterday of a campaign crew from the American City Bureau, who with the Redwood City business men, will conduct the campaign that is to last a month.

The first three weeks of the campaign will be known as the "educational period," during which, by means of the newspaper, printed matter and public meetings, the reorganization process will be thoroughly explained to the citizens of Redwood City and their co-operation invited.

Headquarters for the campaign have been opened in the Drew building in offices occupied by the chamber. Dates of public meetings and the places at which they are to be held will be announced later. There will be no solicitation of memberships or funds at any of the meetings, their object being merely for the puprose of telling residents of Redwood City the plan to reorganize the chamber of commerce; why such an organization is necessary and how it will function after the reorganization has taken place.

During the educational campaign suggestions as to the work to be done by the chamber of commerce will be invited and a tentative program of work will be outlined.

In telling about the movement J. H. Blackmore, who will direct the campaign, said:

"Our work does not cease with the building up of the membership, as some folks might suppose, but goes on, covering a period of three years. Immediately after the first drive for memberships, without which no organization could exist, the new members will elect their own officers, a members' forum will be formed, committees will be appointed in the various phases of work and the chamber will get down to the actual working problems of the city.

"These include the most needed improvements and the bringing of such mercantile establishments here as can be induced to come. A strong membership, backed by a sufficient working fund, will go far to put Redwood City in the class of California cities which are forging to the front through their commercial agencies.

"During the past few weeks the chambers of commerce of Santa Maria, Dixon, Hayward and Kingsburg have undergone reorganization and are now fairly on their way to success. In each place a definite program of work, voted upon and settled by the members, has been adopted and committees are actively at work pushing through needed improvements.

"There is no reason why Redwood City cannot have as strong a chamber of commerce as other California cities. Our plan of reorganization has been found successful in more than 500 American cities and we feel sure that with the hearty support of Redwood City residents it will prove just as successful here."

A survey of the Redwood City high school was made yesterday. This survey consists of a series of questions which high school students are asked to answer. Among the questions are—

What vocation do you expect to follow?

Do you expect to remain in Redwood City following being graduated?

What suggestions have you for the improvement of the city?

The reason vaudeville performers make so many jokes about prohibition is because prohibition isn't any joke to them.

JUDGE GOSBEY'S OPINION IN THE BARNEY CASE

The following oral opinion was rendered from the bench last Thursday at San Jose by Judge Gosbey in the guardianship matter of Lydia H. Barney. The proceedings were brought by her grandson, Benjamin Stanley. The opinion commends Judge Fitzpatrick for his careful management of the old lady's estate.

By the Court—Well, gentlemen, I have given an unusual length of time to hearing evidence upon a petition for the appointment of a guardian for Lydia H. Barney. I have seen the old lady, I have heard her testimony, but it occurs to me that the whole proceeding has been initiated and pressed for one purpose, and that is to discover if the affairs of the alleged incompetent have been properly, honestly and in a businesslike way, or dishonestly, or in a scheming, improper way, conducted. Judge Fitzpatrick has been the persons suspected by the petitioner, B. B. Stanley, as having improperly conducted the affairs of his grandmother.

The account and reports filed by Judge Fitzpatrick cover a long period of time and are quite complete. Now he was not obliged to do this, but it was suggested that it might satisfy the petitioner and the court, maybe others concerned, how or in what manner the affairs of this elderly lady have been conducted and the present condition of those affairs. We have a record now made up. I fail to discover that there has been any deception or improper handling of these affairs so far as any personal benefit to Judge Fitzpatrick is concerned.

For years, the testimony shows, not contradicted, he has been the agent, attorney in fact of this old lady; he has handled many thousands of dollars worth of property for her; he had his method of transacting business for her. Some might say that he is not to be commended for taking all of this property over in his own name; others might say and others have done in the past exactly as he has done. They got an assignment of property and conveyance of property over to the agent, and then they proceeded to handle it. He proceeded to handle the property as he would his own, accounting to his principal or the owner from time to time in regard to the management of the property. I can readily see that if Judge Fitzpatrick should be called suddenly from this earth that his widow might have considerable difficulty in the straightening out of these affairs had not this proceeding been commenced and prosecuted up to the present time. We now have a complete record and admisison and acknowledgment by Judge Fitzpatrick in regard to the ownership of a large amount of property. That has become a permanent record. Title to a good deal of this land may be transferred before Mrs. Barney or the agent should pass away, but we have a report up to the present time which seems to be quite full and complete and I believe must be quite satisfactory to the attorney representing Mr. Stanley, so far as the completeness is concerned.

I am not here to suggest or to say to Judge Fitzpatrick to immediately transfer this property back to this old lady, or to dispose of it in any other manner. That is entirely left with him as a business man, as an advisor. The lady at the time we were there expressed implicit confidence in Judge Fitzpatrick. She leaned upon him; she relied upon him. She would frequently glance over to him as a dependent party or a child would toward a parent. She expressed a great deal of consideration for him and admiration of him. We readily know she is advanced in years, I believe 92——

By Mr. Bush—Ninety-five.

By Mr. Kincaid—Ninety-four.

By the Court—Considerably over 90 and to the say the least she cannot be very long for this world.

Now the question is, is she in such a position or such a condition as should demand the appointment of a guardian to take care of her property? If a guardian should be appointed he would, in a sense, stand in the same relation to Mrs. Barney, so far as taking property over and handling property as Judge Fitzpatrick now does. There would simply be another person coming on the scene as a trustee, as an agent, as a representative, to handle and take care of this property that belongs to Mrs. Barney. What could be gained by it? Nothing, so far as I see. If a guardian should be appointed Judge Fitzpatrick should be invited into a court of equity to account, as trustee for all he has done for this old lady and with her property for the last ten years. I cannot see where he could present to a court of equity any more elaborate, complete or full report than he has presented to us to look at and to examine and pass upon.

Is the lady helpless? We will concede that she is. She is not in a position to go out in the world and meet men and transact business with individuals who perchance might think they have a victim and could deal with her and maybe induce her to convey or sell property or dispose of it. I think we quite admit that if someone would get her confidence she might be willing to turn over property or convey property, or dispose of it, yet the evidence is, or there is no evidence to show that at any time she has been imposed upon by a persuasive grandson. The poor individual admitted, confessed to be broken down in health through dissipation. His appeals to her for money no doubt have been very numerous. The evidence is she has responded quite liberally to this grandson when he would make appeals to her. She has living with her in the same house relatives, warm friends; not a particle of evidence that she has been so weak in mind as to give or assign or turn over or convey to thoes who have been close to her and lived with her constantly, so far as the evidence is concerned, as I gather it, leaning upon Judge Fitzpatrick. He has been her representative. He has her full power of attorney. He has full charge of her material affairs. The matter was submitted to me by Mr. Bush. He made no argument and I don't know there is any room for argument to try to convince this court that Judge Fitzpatrick has designedly or intentionally handled this property for his benefit primarily, but the testimony that was brought out by him, when examined by Mr. Bush, is to the effect that although he made contracts for the sale of a large portion of the real property, and while there was an agreement with the brokers that Judge Fitzpatrick should share in some of the net proceeds, or the profits of the sales, he says, corroborated by the brokers also interested, that he never received a cent in all these years of sales, he has never received anything since the payment of the $5,000 and the $2,000 mentioned in his account, that occurred years ago.

There is nothing along that line, gentlemen, to convince me that he has been handling this property for his benefit, and out of which he has made a profit, nor is it tied up in such a way that convinces me that hereafter he is speculating upon drawing down any large fees or compensation for himself. But we speak and look at this as attorneys, practitioners, and we are able to see that these accounts have been presented in a very open and frank way, and while he admitted, and we all know that people are liable to make a mistake here or there, to forget something, omit a detail, but we have seen how readily he has been disposed, when one or two errors may appear on the fact of a document, to at once correct it, sometimes against his own interest, but he has impressed me as we have gone through this thing in so many weeks, as handling this thing in a businesslike way, as the ordinary, prudent business man would handle his affairs, and that must be the test. Although an advisor, an attorney at law, and counsel in matters of this kind, I do not know any greater degree of prudence and care is to be expected of him than the ordinarily prudent man should handle his own affairs.

Reviewing the whole case, as I have carefully and patiently followed it, I think you will say upon a petition for the appointment of a guardian, I am not convinced, gentlemen, from the testimony I have heard and the evidence produced, that this lady is in such a state of mind as would justify the appointment of a guardian to take care of her affairs, and can only be for her affairs, her property. She is in good hands, with her own people in a home purchased for her, comfortable so far as I know, a nurse in attendance, every attention for her person and comfort that I think is required; no criticism whatever, no evidence at all to show she needs that. The only thing is, is she in such a condition mentally and are the circumstances such, and is her property in such a condition as she might lose it or someone might get it away from her, or she be the subject of these designing people. The law speaks of scheming persons. I cannot see, gentlemen, that she is.

The motion of the petitioner for the appointment of a guardian is denied.

Duck Hunting Reminiscences

By CLAUDE FOX

Story No. 44.

There were other occasions than the trip I wrote about last week with Walter R. Welch which netted little so far as game was concerned, but which gave a bountiful supply of good, sound, experience, which is a wild duck hunter's greatest tutor, coupled in some cases with a vast amount of satisfaction.

Little Jack Welsh, who for many years drove the butcher wagon on the Menlo Park-Mayfield route for the late Thomas Hind, was a veritable thorn in the side of all duck hunting boys of that time. Where he ever came from no one seemed to know. Old Man O'Shaughnessy, who lived here for a number of years, was his foster father. The identity of little Jack ended there. The small, contemptible little tricks he was continually playing on the other duuck hunting boys made him despicable in the eyes of us all. He He was a poor shot, but what he lost in that respect he gained by "swiping" ducks belonging to others. Ignorant, deceitful and crooked, he had to be watched continually in order to keep even with him. Ed Cullen frequently referred to him as a rattlesnake and I must confess the name was well applied.

Jack made it a point all along his butcher route to brag that he always killed the first ducks of the season and that most of the birds the rest of us obtained were his crippies. Of course this came right back to us boys, probably exaggerated to some extent, but nevertheless showing the way the wind blew with little Jack Welsh. The result was we watched him like hawks and when one day he bought six mallard down at Mayfield, brought them home on his butcher wagon, shouldered his gun after supper, carried the birds down to the first fence, where Fred Stalter and myself were hunting, blazed away with both barrels into the bright moonlight up at the old bog, and then proudly exhibited the six beauties, claiming to have killed them, to excite our jealousy, and we subsequently found him out, little Jack had played his last card. From thenceforth he was not unlike Napoleon on the island of St. Helena.

But he had so often bragged of getting the first ducks of the season, which was the one ambitiou of all of us, that Fred, Ed Cullen and myself, decided he should no longer wear that laurel, real or imaginary. The season for wild ducks opened then on September 1, but usually there were not many birds in the marshes in this vicinity till the 15th of that month. It had been what was then called a dry season the winter before and as there were no early rains the next year, little fresh water was flowing to waste, forming puddling ponds which the wild ducks so much desire. The Cooley well, however, never failed and we knew there was a small pond at the end of the levee near by.

Now you must remember there was no moon and if we got any shooting at all it was to be obtained just at dusk, or between sundown and dark. We had no horse or cart at that time and it was a case of shanks mare. From here to the Cooley well on a straight line down through the field is six miles if it is a foot. I have often thought, would the duck hunting boys of today take that hike, down and back, a distance of 1 2miles, for what we term duck shooting, and the satisfaction, if such was obtained, of wresting from the braggadocio little Jack Welsh, the honor wich he had so proudly proclaimed. Uncertainty was of course at that time of the year, our main obstacle. We had not been down there for five months and the result of that trip was consequently problematical. I have before stated in these articles that the duck hunting boys of today were as game as those of yesterday. If I am correct our effor that day shows the extreme to which we went at times to obtain our hearts' desires and will furnish the lads of today something to judge of our gameness.

Leaving here at 1 o'clock on the afternoon of September 1 we started south through the fields of brown tar week with a determination to make good, if such a thing was possible. Confidence, I must admit, was lacking, but the boys who went "over there" had nothing on us when it came to a determ'ned effort to accomplish our objective.

As we walked along our conversation naturally centered on what the evening would bring forth and if success crowned our efforts the mighty fall of little Jack Welsh. All the old places where there was any likelihood of there being any fresh water were examined carefully for feathers and tracks and we even took the chances of bringing down the wrath of Jimmy Flood upon our heads by making an inspection of the Gamble pond. Not a sign was discovered and what small hopes we did have went a glimmering after we left there. Fred even suggested that we turn back, but Ed Cullen, old "sure shot Ed," possessed a grimness in everything he undertook; that was an admirable trait of his character. There would be no turning back; we had started to attain a specific purpose and it must be accomplished, if possible. It was a beautiful afternoon, just a little warm, but not too much so to be uncomfortable, and we took our time, resting after the long stretches between each cross fence. Fred had taken his faithful old dog, Carlo, along just as he said for a little exercise. Ed laughed when he saw the dog was going to accompany us and declared that if he could not himself retrieve what ducks we killed he would throw his gun away and never fire another shot. The dog got the exercise, all right, for just before we reached the sixth fence one of those playful big jacks bounded out of the grass, went through an opening in the fence with Carlo a close second, and the way that rabbit played with the dog was annoying. He kept just far enough ahead to be out of harm's way and the last we saw of man's four-footed friend was a red and white streak down near Billy Carnduff's. He came back home, however, and Fred had to admit that so far as our trip was concerned the object for which he had brought Carlo along had been fully accomplished.

hTe sun was getting well down in the westward as we passed along the Carnduff willows, where fine tomatoes are now grown, and ascended the slight rise in the Cooley field from where we could see the old well and levee where our lingering hopes centered. Much to our delight water was flowing down the ditch to the levee and out to the end where the pond spread out probably not over 14 feet sqare. How eagerly we approached that little puddle. It meant yes or no to all our hopes and object.

"They have been here!" exclaimed Ed, who was somewhat in advance, as he stooped down and picked up a breast feather from the water's edge. How we did examine that small bit of evidence and high ran our hopes when we saw it was from a biddie mallard. Little Jack Welsh was to be dethroned. Already we could see his reptation tottering. A closer scrutiny around the edges of the pond brought forth half a dozen more exemplars to prove the presence of the wild birds we sought, and we also found in the soft mud claw tracks where the birds had climbed on the edge of the hard ground.

No three kids could have been happier and we planned carefully just how we were to sit or rather lay half covered in the fringe of the rank marsh grass in order to be sure of obtaining what we came for. The birds had been there and that they would return as twilight settled was a foregone conclusion. When our respective places of concealment had been decided upon it was agreed that we should let the birds alight when they came in. Fred was to shoot on the water and Ed and myself were to attend to them as they rose. It made no difference to us who killed the ducks. We were three good friends whose duck hunting reputations had been maligned, and revenge was to be ours.

It's a long wait for the sun to sink to rest on the first of September and before it had disappeared and twilight approached each of us was imbued with that itchy, nervous feeling that comes with high strung anxiety. Nestling in our respective places, with guns cocked and ready for action, we strained our eyes toward the marshes as the shades of darkness approached and smoked in silence to keep our nerves in trim.

The shadows lengthened. The golden sunset had faded from the western sky and the deep blue background to the eastward toward the bay made the sight of objects in that direction impossible beyond fifty yards. Still they did not come. Were we to be disappointed?

"I guess it's all off," said Fred.

"Keep still," muttered Ed.

Nothing had been seen; not a flutter heard; I could almost hear my heart beating, so tense was the situation. Suddenly, as if they came from nowhere, two mallards appeared four feet over the pond and prepared to settle in the water. Instructions were forgotten. It was not unlike the battle of Sanitago, when the signal flew "They are coming out." The only difference was that in this case they were coming in; in fact they had already arrived. Everybody got busy at once. The two ducks never had time to alight. Each of us raised and fired The six shots rang out so close together that it was a wonder both birds did not die of fright. One dropped stone dead on the edge of the pond. How the other ever got away has been an unsolved mystery. Had either of us been alone those two mallards would have been easy marks.

Who killed the duck was never known and we did not care. We gave all honor to "sure shot" Ed, who is now sleeping his last long sleep on the bank of the Yukon river.

It was a long, wearly 6-mile walk back home, but we felt that we amply were repaid. Little Jack Welsh had not killed the first duck that season; he was king, either real or imaginary, no longer. That mallard was advertised far and wide and each succeeding year Fred, Ed and myself took particular pains to see that the honor for acquiring the first duck of the season was not bestowed on the man who drove Thomas Hind's butcher wagon on the Menlo-Mayfield route so many years ago.

"CAMILLE" WRITTEN BY DUMAS WHEN 20

To Be Presented at Sequoia Theater February 27 and 28

"Camille," the Nazimova production for the Metro Pictures Corporation to shown at the Sequoia Theater Monday and Tuesday, February 27 and 28, is the inimitable Russian star's modernized version of that famous story of Alexander Rumas, the younger.

The story, famed throughout the civilized world as a masterpiece of love and sacrifice, was the first play written by the younger Dumas and was done when he was little over 20 years of age. He is said to have written it in eight days. His father pronounced it a masterpiece, but it was denied production by managers because of its unusual character.

The censors interdicted it. So in seven days the author turned it into a novel, in which form it was published, making its appearance just before the revolution of 1848.

Four years later, on February 2, 1952, it was put on the Vaudeville Theater at Paris through the influence of the Duc de Morny and its unusual theme won it instant attention. By many critics it is regarded as the prototype of the modern "problem" play.

Since then it has been one of the favorites, revival after revival demonstrating the vogue it still enjoys despite its age. Its strong emotional scenes have won the histrionic support of many notable actresses, who have listed it among their repertoire of theatrical offerings. It has enjoyed equal popularity in this county, England, France and Germany, where the theater goers have warmly welcomed it both in adaptations and in the original French.

June Mathis adapted "Camille." Ray C. Smallwood was director. Rudolph Bergquist photographer; Natacha Rambova art director and Joseph Calder technical director.

Few financial institutions in the United States maintain a larger ratio of "quick" or "liquid" assets in proportion to the amount of their liabilities than the Bank of Italy.

The substantial character of its assets is the result of a highly-organized, metropolitan system of selection and elimination.

This is made possible by its ability to maintain an efficient statewide credit research system, and also to employ the best banking talent obtainable.
